Each week, I am thankful for the opportunity to serve at Walking Tall. As part of the kitchen staff, I am always blessed by simply being at Walking Tall around the young men and mentors, and I am frequently observing how God is using this ministry to reach so many. Sometimes it's simply the smiles that spread across the faces of the young men as they find out what tasty meal is being served; food speaks to hungry young men after all. Other times if one of the teens is having a rough day, one of the mentors will come alongside him to talk and help him work through difficulties. It is equally encouraging to see the many times that the young men work and feel accomplished in the life skills that they are acquiring as they attend WT meetings. It is a privilege to see these young people grow and mature, and not only do the mentors teach skills, but they also show them what it means to be a godly man of character. There is always wisdom being poured into the lives of the young men, and it is clear that being a part of God's work not only benefits those young people who attend Walking Tall, but all of us who are blessed to be a small part of the work that God is doing in and through this ministry.
