Mentoring for Life

Ken has been with Walking Tall for 11 years. He was there from almost the beginning when the group only met once a month. As the need for more frequent meetings arose, Ken and the other mentors recognized the necessity to meet more often. Ken used to be involved in woodworking, and as the organization continues to expand and requires the construction of other buildings and such, his experience in construction naturally makes him a good fit for the task. The construction encompasses a lot more than just a hammer and nail.

Ken says, "we can work with young men from all walks of life. He explains that he previously worked with a ministry, primarily with troubled kids. They would live with us for a year on a ranch, isolated from the outside world for a period. However, here we get to work with the guys and help them navigate everyday life in different circumstances and situations."

He enjoys spending time with these young men around town, on the playing fields, at church with their families, building relationships, and sharing life experiences. Ken desires to stay connected with the young men as they grow, work, and navigate life. He hopes they will become more involved in junior mentoring younger peers and remain committed, even as life gets busy. He believes they can impact the community and establish themselves, knowing their potential and identity in Christ.

Ken still meets with his mentor weekly, and mentoring is a lifelong commitment for him. He is now dedicating more time to working one-on-one with some of the young men, which has greatly impacted his life. Ken emphasizes the importance of directing our efforts toward heaven and investing in the kingdom. Our aim is to empower talented youth, follow Christ, set an example for others and positively influencing them to impact the kingdom.

Ken says, "I cherish this program; it feels like family to me. I'm connected and feel part of something that impacts myself and others. I love this program, and I'm blessed to be a part of it."

All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness. 2 Timothy 3:16
